A CURIOUS PRENCH TRIAL

rather curious case, which has remained in suspense for the last two years is now about to be decided before the civil ribunal of the Seine. The plaintiffs are the duchess of Pitz James and the Duke de Marmier, who, in virtue of events that took place a century ago, claim the right to a box at the Opera Comique in Paris, which right has remained undisputed from the year 1781, when the box in question was made over to the Duke de Choiseul and his descendants, until the 1st of January, 1880. when the entrance to it was refused the Duchess of Fitz James and the Duke de Marmier. In the summer of 1781, the Duke and Duchess de Choisenl contracted an engagement with the king's comedians to build a theatre, at that epoch called the Comedie Italienne, and which is now known as the Opera Comique. According to the terms of the contract, it was stipulated that M, and Madame de Choiseul should, with the Duchess de Gramont sister of the former, have perpetual enjoyment of a box containing eight places, situated next to the king's box. After the death of these three persons it was further stipulated that the loge should belong to any member of the Choisenl family designated by them, and upon the demise of this individual the property was to be transmitted to the nearest relative of the family so long as there were any representatives of the name left. In the event of the line becoming extinct, the box was to go to the "comediens du Roy." The original possessor of the famous loge, the Duke de Choiseul, died in 1785, and in 1792, after the death of the duchess, it fell to a nephew, Gabriel de Choiseul, who departed this life in 1838, leaving the box to his only child, the Duchess de Marmier, To her succeeded the present holders of the loge, whose claims are now disputed on the score that, ninety-nine years having elapsed since the property was made over to the family, it legally reverts to the "Administration des Domaines." A great deal of litigation has already risen out of this case, upon the rights of which the civil tribunal will have to pronounce.

A DOG MINER.

Instances of canine economy are by no means rare; but the account of a dog miser is, so far as our records extend, unique. Dandie, the animal referred to, was a Newfoundland dog, belonging to a gentleman in Edinburgh. It frequently had money given to it, because, besides other interesting signs of sagacity, it would go to the baker's and buy it's own bread. But Dandie received more money than his needs called for, and so he took to hoarding it. This his master discovered in consequence of the dog appearing one day with a breakfast roll when it was known that no one had given it any money. Suspicion aroused, search. was made in the room where the dog slept. Dandie appeared quite unconcerned until his bed was approached, when he seized her away, and became so violent that his gets on idleness that an observer, casting even after this; but he exhibited a great of our closest friends. dislike afterward for the servant who had discovered his hoard, and in future was careful to select a different place of concealment. Stories of dogs who carry money to shops in order to obtain food are quite numerous; but the following incident, which was communicated to the Bristol Mercury, is, if authentic, probably unparalleled even in canine records. A Bristol dog was allowed by a certain butcher to receive his meat on trust, the butcher scoring each pennyworth supplied on a board with a piece of chalk. One day our canine friend, ob. serving the man make two marks with the chalk instead of one, seized another piece of meat, and, despite all the effects of the butcher to detain him, ran off home with both pieces in his mouth .- Chambers's Journal.

SOME NAMEOW ESCAPES.

Marvelous are the escapes from tigers. Colonel Warren, of the Bengal army, was carried off, but killed the tiger by means of a pistol he had with him, I believe; and many other sportsmen have recovered after being severely mauled. But the most extraordinary escape was Captain Hill's, who, while leading a party of police, was attacked by a noted man-eater in the Yonzaloen Hills, and had a stand-up fight. The tiger pinioned his right arm to his side, put his paws on Hill's shoulders, and stood over him open-mouthed, while Hill endeavored to strike him with his left arm over the right shoulder.

With a fiendish growl the tiger snapped down on to his victim's neck, who fortunately fell at the moment. Thus only the upper fange penetrated, and the tiger turned over a complete somersault; and when the man and tiger faced each other again, the biped had apparently been converted into a quadruped, as he was on his knees and hands, and the blood pouring down his face and beard gave him, I have no doubt, a diabolical expression-or, at all events, the tiger seemed to think so, for he put his tail between his legs and ran for his

This tiger afterward killed a Karen, and was shot over the body by means of two guns tied near it, with a string attached to the trigger, fastened across the path he was expected by. To show the audacity of a tiger, I may briefly relate the following: Our Thirty-sixth native Infantry was on route to Berhampore, and an officer's servant-who, with the mess kit, had, as is often the case, preceded the corps to the next encampment ground-was, just at dusk, and close to the mess guard, carried off on the high road by a tiger. An infant he had in his arms when he was seized was quite unburt in the awful rush that took

Early next morning the tracks were followed by three officers, and as the body had been very little mangled, it was determined to wait for the tiger's return. While a platform was being got ready one of the party went back, while the other two sat a little way off to est their lunch, and their guncarriers were scattered about collecting materials for the machan. While thus employed the tiger carried off the body from their midst, in open day, and through not very thick brushwood, without being observed. To follow up was useless, as the Tigers were so plentiful close to the large lown of Pegu, in British Burmah, that many traps were set for them. In one, for lack of something better. Dr. Le Presle, Assistant Surgeon of . Her Majesty's Eighty. fourth Regiment, placed a duck, and caught big tiger. An officer of the commission, who was sleeping with the doors and windows of his bedroom open, had a powerful bull-dog, which was chained to his bed, killed by a tiger by his bedside. When I was at Banlong a poor woman who was sleeping in the veranda of her house, was fearfully clawed, but not bitten or carried off, by a tiger. When the plains of Sylhet are covered with water, tigers ascend the hills and are very plentiful at Cherra Poonghie, often leaving their marks not only within the compounds of the houses, but in the verandas themselves, and no one hare venture out at night without tom-toms and torches. At Shillong we and the sepoys killed several on foot one year. - The

A REMARKABLY SMART YOUTH.

Is Eli Perkins again abroad, or has the Lying Club been revived? The following was elipped from an nuknown exchange: "A blind boy of Montreal has made a minature house inside of an ordinary fourounce medicine bottle. The building is nade of forty pieces of wood, neatly fitted and glued together. It would puzzle a man who was not blind to get the pieces into a pottle without putting them together. The opper of the bottle is still more wonder-It almost fits the neck of the bottle, the top being large enough to prevent its going down too far. Near the other end of the stopper, inside the bottle below the neck, a small wooden peg has been driven, which extends far enough on each side of the stopper to prevent its removal from the bottle. How this was accomplished is a mystery." This is almost perfect; still, had the blind boy been bereft of arms and legs, and accomplished the task with his ears and nose, we should have been inclined to give the author more credit for

MANNERS.

I think Hans Andersen's story of the cobweb cloth woven so fine that it was invisible mean manners, which do really clothe a princely nature. Such a one can well go in a blanket, if he would. In the gymnasium or on the sea beach, his such superiority does not leave him. But he who has not this fine garment of behavior is studious of dress, and then not less of house and furniture and pictures and gardens, in all which we hope to lie perdue, and not be exposed.

There are so many unsubstantial sorrows the servant by her gown and tried to drag which the necessity of our mortal state bemaster had to hold him.
